
All That Remains: WWI objects from New Zealand museum collections He Waihotanga Iho mai i te Pakanga Tuatahi

You are invited to be part of All That Remains: WWI objects from New Zealand museum collections – a new eHive community exhibition project. The website is live at www.allthatremains.net.nz.

All That Remains is a collections-driven exhibition project that explores New Zealanders' objects related to WWI from both overseas and the home front. In order to preserve memories and memorabilia from WWI, this project aims to identify wartime objects within New Zealand museums, historical societies, art galleries and RSAs, and draw them together to create a moving exhibition that informs and enlightens current generations of the sacrifices of their ancestors. The exhibition is produced by National Services Te Paerangi at Te Papa.

Project goals

All That Remains aims to:

- enable New Zealand's museums to participate in WWI commemorations through an easily accessible online exhibition
- provide a central digital repository and place for locating information about WWI objects across New Zealand collections
- provide an incentive to digitise collection items and share them with others
- provide a platform for partnerships between RSAs and museums to support care of WWI collections in communities.

What to contribute

All That Remains is designed to showcase all types of objects related to WWI. We want objects collected overseas and from the home front, those used by soldiers and those belonging to the people at home.

How to contribute

Participation is simple. First, log in to NZMuseums.

- If you're not a member of NZMuseums or can't access your NZMuseums account, email natserv@tepapa.govt.nz and we'll sort you out.

Next, join the All That Remains community:

- Click on 'Communities', then 'Find a community', search for All That Remains and press 'Join'.

Now you're ready to select objects to be included in the All That Remains community. You can contribute up to 200 objects for free, more with paid accounts.

To contribute collection items which are already on NZMuseums:

- identify WWI-related objects you'd like to add to the All That Remains community

- review the content you'd like to share about these objects
- save the object record, making sure to tick the 'Share with All That Remains' box to add the object to the All That Remains website.

To upload new collection items to All That Remains:

- choose the objects in your collection to contribute
- finalise the content you'd like to share about these objects
- select or create digital images for the objects
- ensure that you have copyright clearance to publish the objects and images
- upload your records in bulk or create them online in eHive
- save the object record, making sure to tick the 'Share with All That Remains' box to add the object to the All That Remains website.

Let your visitors know they can see more of your collection

We've produced a poster and flyer that can be used to direct visitors to your museum to see your WWI collection online. This is a great way to extend their visit beyond the physical display space.

The poster and flyers can be downloaded from our website for free.

What are the benefits of joining the All That Remains community?

- be a part of a new collaborative community project
- establish or increase your organisation's presence on the web
- make your collection accessible to a new online audience
- market your collection and promote interest in your organisation
- develop connections with other organisations with similar collections
- share your collection online using eHive's user-friendly features

What National Services Te Paerangi provides:
